PREFACE.

THE faculty of speech, or the power of giving sounds to thought, and expressing the conceptions of the mind, by combinations of intelligible tones addressed to the ear, is at once the ornament and distinction of man, and in proportion as he cultivates this high privilege of his nature, his intercourse becomes dignified, and his means of attaining knowledge extended.

Impressed with a conviction of this truth, we find that men have in all ages paid attention to this pre-eminent gift of their species, and have cultivated the Art of Speaking not only as an ornamental, but an useful accomplishment. In our own country in particular so many eminent men have gone before us in this path, that little remains for the Editor of a Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language, but to familiarize the mind to knowledge already extant, and to endeavour, by a lucid arrangement of the materials of his predecessors, to smooth the path of scien-

To accomplish this seemingly humble task the Editor has spared no pains nor attention; and he flatters himself, that though his labours boast not originality, they are calculated to facilitate the acquisition of a branch of knowledge equally worthy the attention of all classes of society, and highly ornamental to those who attain it. He therefore with some confidence offers this little work to the world, trusting that it will meet with that reception from a generous public of which he has laboured to render it deserving.

PROSODIAL
RULES AND INSTITUTES.

PROSODY consists of two parts: the former teaches the true pronunciation of words, and the latter the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION

is just when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent; or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The principles of pronunciation are letters; and the elements or letters into which the words of any language may be analysed, form the necessary alphabet of that language.

In the English alphabet are twenty-six letters.

a b c d e f g h i j k l m n o p q r s t u v w x y z.

Of these there are six vowels, or letters, which by themselves each make, by simply opening the mouth, a perfect sound. The remaining twenty are called consonants, or letters which cannot be sounded without a vowel, and whose pronunciation depends on the particular application and use of every part of the mouth, as the teeth, the lips, the palate, &c.

The several sounds of the English vowels are exhibited in the following scheme.

SCHEME OF THE VOWELS.

Observations on the foregoing Scheme.

THE reader will notice that the a marked short, thus ă, has its utterance lengthened by having the accent placed immediately after it—as in shă′rp, bă′th, ă′ss, &c. the ă is sensibly longer than in ăsh′, hăt′, glăd′, &c. where the accent follows the consonant. The same holds with respect to short ŏ. This distinction should be particularly noted by the consultor of this work.

In sounding ī open your mouth as wide as if you were going to pronounce the broad, obscure, and guttural â′, and meant to sound that vowel; but on the first effort of the voice for that purpose, check its progress by a sudden motion of the under jaw towards the upper, stopping it in that situation in which the slender sound î is formed, and then instantly cutting off all sound. Thus as the sound of â′ is not completed, nor the sound of î continued, there results from the union of the two a third sound or diphthong which has no resemblance to either, and yet is a compound of both. (Sheridan.)

To form the diphthong ŏɏ′ or ŏɣ′, it is necessary to pronounce the full sound of â′, dwelling some time on that vowel before the sound is intercepted by the motion of the under jaw to the position of forming the slender sound î, and then the voice is instantly to cease.—This diphthong oi′ or oy′, differs from that of ī only in this, that the first vowel â′ is distinctly heard before it unites with the latter vowel î. (Sheridan.)

To produce the diphthong ŏû′ or ŏw′, it is necessary that there should be the greatest aperture of the mouth, as if it were about to form the sound â′; but before that sound is completed, the organs are to change to the position of pronouncing ô (or ū), by a rapid motion of the under jaw towards the upper, and protruding the lips in the form of sounding ô (or ū), at the same time stopping the voice short; and thus, as in the diphthong ī, by having neither the sound of the former or latter letter completed; there arises, from the coalescence of the two, a third sound different from both, which is the diphthong ou′ or ow′. (Sheridan)—Here again the absence of the accent shortens the sound a little.

Wh sounds hô or hū before a, e, i, o, u, y.

Wh sounds only like aspirated h before o and oo.

When a letter is to be silent, the same is left out in the representation of the sounds to be given to each syllable; the silent e only is often characterised by being an Italic e at the end of a syllable, instead of being a Roman e, lest, where that silent e serves to prolong the syllable, the absence of this final e should deceive the eye

Oftentimes y without any mark over it, because its sound gently slides into that of the next vowel, will be found in this dictionary, as in Sheridan's quarto. From this it will be inferred, that this y does not form of itself a syllable: for instance in grammarian, marked grăm-mā′-ryăn, one is given to understand that the word consists only of three syllables, from the i being changed into a coalescing y—There are, however, many words in which the i actually forms a syllable of its own before another vowel, though that syllable be a very short one, and it will generally form such a syllable when the i is preceded by bl, cl, dl, &c. or by br, cr, dr, &c.

In order to render this Dictionary more useful to those who only make occasional reference to works of this nature, as well as to assist the student, the preceding scheme is run across the top of each page, which will prevent the trouble and inconvenience of turning to this part of the book, and form a key which may be consulted with facility.

B is silent before t or after m; as in debt, dumb.

C is silent before the sound of k, and in a few other instances; as in stick, sack, muscle.

Ch is sometimes silent, as in yacht.

D is sometimes silent, as in han*d*some.

At the end of a syllable in ff, one f is mute.

G is often silent before m, n, h, as in *phleg*m, gnat, reign, sign, light.

Gh is often silent before t, and at the end of words or syllables, as in light; high, &c.

H is often silent when initial, and when between g mute and final t, as in h*onour*, *sig*h*t*.

K is silent before n in the same syllable, as in k*nave*, k*not*.

L is silent before k and m, as in balk, balm

N is silent after m in the same syllable, as in *hym*n, *condem*n.—The letter n, after e or o contracted, is uttered somewhat through the nose, so that its sound becomes obscure, as in heav'n, pers'n, for heaven, person.

P is sometimes silent, as in p*salm*.

Ph is sometimes silent, as in ph*thisic*.

On the Organic Formation of the English Consonants.

Extracted from Dr. Crombie's Etymology, &c. of the English Language.

CONSONANTS are generally divided into mutes and semi-vowels. The mutes are those, which entirely, and at once, obstruct the sound of the vowel, and prevent its continuation. These are called perfect mutes. Those, which do not suddenly obstruct it, are called imperfect mutes.

Semi-vowels are those consonants which do not entirely obstruct the voice, but whose sounds may be continued at pleasure, thus partaking of the nature of vowels.

The nature of these consonants I proceed briefly to explain.

A vowel sound may be continued at pleasure, or it may be terminated, either by discontinuing the vocal effort, in which case it is not articulated by any consonant, as in pronouncing the vowel o; or by changing the conformation of the mouth, or relative position of the organs of speech, so that the vowel sound is lost by articulation, as in pronouncing the syllable or. It is to be observed also, that a vowel may be articulated, not only by being terminated by a consonant, as in the example now given, but likewise by introducing the sound with that position of the organs, by which it had, in the former case, been terminated, as in pronouncing the syllable ro.

In pronouncing the consonants, there are five distinguishable positions of the organs. The first is the application of the lips to each other, so as to close the mouth. Thus are formed the consonants p, b, and m.

In the second position, the under lip is applied to the fore teeth of the upper jaw; and in this manner we pronounce the consonants f and v.

The third position is, when the tongue is applied to the fore teeth; and thus we pronounce th.

In the fourth position we apply the fore part of the tongue to the fore part of the palate; and by this application we pronounce the letters t, d, s, z, r, l, n.

The fifth position is, when the middle part of the tongue is applied to the palate, and thus we pronounce k, the hard sound of g, (as in ga) sh, j. and ng.

In the first position we have three letters, of which the most simple, and indeed the only articulator, being absolutely mute, is p. In the formation of this letter, nothing is required but the sudden closing of the mouth, and stopping the vowel sound; or the sound may be articulated by the sudden opening of the lips, in order to emit the compressed sound of the vowel.

Now, if instead of simply expressing the vowel sound by opening the lips, in saying, for example, pa, we shall begin to form a guttural sound, the position being still preserved; then on opening the lips we shall pronounce the syllable ba. The guttural sound is produced by a compression of the larynx, or wind-pipe, and is that kind of murmur, as Bishop Wilkins expresses it, which is heard in the throat, before the breath is emitted with the vocal sound. B, therefore, though justly considered as a mute, is not a perfect mute..

The mouth being kept in the same position, and the breath being emitted through the nostrils, the letter m is produced.

In the first position, therefore, we have a perfect mute p, having no audible sound; a labial and liquid consonant m, capable of a continued sound; and, between these two extremes, we have the letter b, somewhat audible, though different from any vocal sound.

Here then are three things to be distinguished. 1st, The perfect mute, having no sound of any kind. 2dly, The perfect consonant, having not only a proper, but continued sound: and 3dly, between these extremes we find the letter b, having a proper sound, but so limitted, that, in respect to the perfect consonant, it may be termed a mute, and in relation to the perfect mute, may be properly termed imperfect.

In the second position we have the letters f and v, neither of which are perfect mutes. The letter f is formed by having the aspiration not altogether interrupted, but emitted forcibly between the fore teeth and under lip. This is the simple articulation in this position. If to this we join the guttural sound, we shall have the letter v, a letter standing in nearly the same relation to f, as b and m, in the first position, stand to p. The only difference between f and v is, that, in the former, the compression of the teeth and under lip is not so strong as in the latter, and that the former is produced by the breath only, and the latter by the voice and breath combined.

The consonant f, therefore, though not a mute like p, in having the breath absolutely confined, may notwithstanding be considered as such, consistently with that principle, by which a mute is understood to be an aspiration without guttural sound.

Agreeably to the distinction already made, v may be termed a perfect consonant, and f an imperfect one, having no proper sound, though audible. Thus we have four distinctions in our consonantal alphabet, namely, of perfect and imperfect consonants; perfect and imperfect mutes; thus, p is a perfect mute, having no sound.

b an imperfect mute, having proper sound, but limited.
f an imperfect consonant, having no sound, but audible.

In the third position we have th as heard in the words then and thin, formed by placing the tip of the tongue between the teeth, and pressing it against the upper teeth. The only difference between these articulations is, that, like f and v, the one is formed by the breath only, and the other by the breath and voice together*.

Here also may be distinguished the perfect and the imperfect consonant; for the th in thin has no sound, but is audible, whereas the th in this, there, has a sound, and that continued.

In the fourth position there are several consonants formed.

1st. If the breath be stopped, by applying the fore part of the tongue forcibly to that part of the palate which is contiguous to the fore teeth, we produce the perfect mute t, having neither aspiration nor guttural sound. By accompanying this operation of the tongue and palate with the guttural sound, we shall pronounce the letter d, which, like b of the first position, may be considered as a mute, though not perfect. For in pronouncing ed the tongue at first gently touches the gum, and is gradually pressed closer, till the sound is obstructed; whereas in pronouncing et, the tongue is at once pressed so close, that the sound is instantly intercepted.

2dly, If the tip of the tongue be turned up towards the upper gum, so as not to touch it, and thus the breath be cut by the sharp point of the tongue, passing through the narrow chink left between that and the gum, we pronounce the sibilating sound of s. If we accompany this operation with a guttural sound, as in b, v, and th in then, we shall pronounce the letter z; the same difference subsisting between s and z as between f and v, p and b, th and th.

3dly, If we make the tip of the tongue vibrate rapidly between the upper and lower jaw, so as not to touch the latter, and the former but gently, we shall pronounce the letter r. The more closely and forcibly the tongue vibrates against the upper jaw, the stronger will the sound be rendered. It is formed about the same distance from the teeth, as the letter d, or rather somewhat behind it.

* The sound of th, in thin, is usually marked with a stroke through the h, to distinguish it from its other sound, thus, thick.

4thly, If the end of the tongue be gently applied to the fore part of the palate, a little behind the seat of the letter d, and somewhat before the place of r, and the voice be suffered to glide gently over the sides of the tongue, we shall pronounce the letter l. Here the breadth of the tongue is contracted, and a space left for the breath to pass from the upper to the under part of the tongue, in forming this the most vocal of all the consonants.

5thly, If the aspirating passage, in the formation of the preceding consonant, be stopped, by extending the tongue to its natural breadth, so as to intercept the voice, and prevent its exit by the mouth, the breath emitted through the nose will give the letter n.

In the fifth position, namely, when we apply the middle or back part of the tongue to the palate, we have the consonants k, g, sh, j, and ng.

If the middle of the tongue be raised, so as to press closely against the roof of the mouth, and intercept the voice at once, we pronounce the letter k (ek). If the tongue be not so closely applied at first, and the sound be allowed to continue a little, we have the letter g (eg). Thus ek and eg bear the same analogy to each other, as et and ed of the fourth position. If the tongue be protruded towards the teeth, so as not to touch them, and be kept in a position somewhat flatter than in pronouncing the letter s, the voice and breath passing over it through a wider chink, we shall have the sound of esh.

If we apply the tongue to the palate as in pronouncing sh, but a little more forcibly, and accompanying it with the guttural sound, we shall have the sound of the French j. Thus j is in this position analogous to the letters b, v, th in the first, second, and third positions, and is a simple consonant; J in English is a double consonant, compounded of d and the French j, as in join.

If we raise the middle of the tongue to the palate gently, so as to permit part of the voice to issue through the mouth, forcing the remainder back, through the nose, keeping at the same time the tongue in the same position as in pronouncing eg, we shall have the articulating sound of ing, for which we have no simple character.

The only remaining letter h is the note of aspiration, formed in various positions, according to the vowel with which it is combined.

What effect the compression of the larynx has in articulation, may be seen by comparing these pairs of consonants.

OF ACCENT.

HAVING thus given what we deem the best authorities as to the sounds of the letters, we shall insert the following short rules for the accent, or quantity of syllables, by Dr. Johnson; which, though subject to exception, are, perhaps, the best suited to the comprehension of the uninformed student of any extant, on a subject so complicated, and where so much, after all the rules that can be given, must depend on the compass and capacity of the voice of the speaker.

Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice on a certain letter or syllable in a word, that it may be better heard than the rest, or distinguished from them; as, in the word presu'me, the stress of the voice must be on the letter u, and second syllable sume, which takes the accent.

Every word of our language, of more than one syllable, has one of them distinguished from the rest in this manner; and every monosyllable of two or more letters has one of its letters thus distinguished.

As Emphasis is a stronger and fuller sound of voice, by which we distinguish some word or words on which we design to lay particular stress, to shew how they affect the rest of tûe sentence, so, where other reasons do not forbid, the accent always dwells with greatest force on that part of the word which, from its importance, the hearer has always the greatest occasion to observe.

OF DISSYLLABLES.

Of Dissyllables, formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as chi'ldish, ki'ngdom, a'ctest, a'cted, to'ilsome, lo'vers, co'ffer, fa'irer, fo'remost, ze'alous, fu'lness, go'dly, me'ekly, a'rtist.

Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to bege't, to besee'm, to besto'w.

Of Dissyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to desca'nt, a de'scant; to ceme'nt, a ce'ment; to contra'ct, a co'ntract. This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as delight, perfu'me.

All dissyllables ending in y, as cra'nny; in our, as la'bour, fa'vour; in ow, as wi'llow, wa'llow, except allo'w; in le, as ba'ttle, bi'ble; in ish, as ba'nish; in ck, as ca'mbrick, ca'ssock; in ter, as to ba'tter; in age, as cou'rage; in en, as fa'sten; in et, as qui'et, accent the former syllable.

Dissyllable nouns in er, as ca'nker, bu'tter, have the accent on the former syllable.

Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as compri'se, esca'pe; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appe'ase, re'veal; or ending in two consonants, as atte'nd; have the accents on the latter syllable.

Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as appla'use; except words in ain, as ce'rtain, mo'untain.

OF TRISSYLLABLES.

Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word; as, lo'veliness, te'nderness, conte'mner, wa'ggoner, phy'sical, bespa'tter, co'mmenting, comme'nding, assu'rance.

Trisyllables ending in ous, as gra'cious, u'rduous; in al, as ca'pital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

Trissyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as co'untenance, co'ntinence, a'rmament, i'mminent, e'legant, pro'pagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as conni'vance, acqua'intance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promu'lgate.

Trissyllables ending in y, as e'ntity, spe'cify, li'berty, vi'ctory, su'bsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

Trissyllables in le or re accent the first syllable, as le'gible, the'atre, except disci'ple, and some words which have a position, as exa'mple, epi'stle.

Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as ple'nitude.

Trissyllables ending in ator, as crea'tor; or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endea'vour; or a vowel before two consonants, as domestic, accent the middle syllable.

Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are common[illegible] French, as acquie'sce, reparte'e, magazi'ne; or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immatu're, overcha'rge.

OF POLYSYLLABLES.

Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as a'rrogating, co'ntinency, inco'ntinently, comme'ndable, communi'cableness. We should therefore say dispu'table, indispu'table, rather than di'sputable, indis'putable, and adverti'sement, rather than adve'rtisement.

Words in ion have the accent on the antepenult, as salva'tion, perturba'tion, conco'ction; words in atour, or ator, on the penult, as dedica'tor.

Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as a'micable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combu'stible.

Words ending in ous have the accents on the antepenult, as uxo'rious, volu'ptuous.

Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as pusi'llani'mity, acti'vity.

OF VERSIFICATION.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables, according to certain laws established in a language by frequent repetition, the harmony of which consists in a pleasing variety of accented and unaccented, syllables, which, connected, form a foot. They are called feet, because it is by their aid that the voice, as it were, steps along through the verse, in a measured pace; and it is necessary that the syllables which mark this regular movement of the voice should, in some manner, be distinguished from the others. This distinction was made among the ancient Romans, by dividing their syllables into long and short, and ascertaining their quantity, by an exact proportion of time in sounding them; the long being to the short as two to one; and the long syllables, being thus the more important, marked the movement. In English, syllables are divided into accented and unaccented; and the accented syllables being as strongly distinguished from the unaccented, by the peculiar stress of the voice upon them, are equally capable of marking the movement, and pointing out the regular paces of the voice, as the long syllables were by their quantity, among the Romans.

When the feet are formed by an accent on vowels, they are exactly of the same nature as the ancient feet, and have the same just quantity in their syllables. So that, in this respect, we have all that the ancients had, and something which they had not. We have, in fact, duplicates of each foot, yet with such a difference as to fit them for different purposes, to be applied at our pleasure.

Every foot has, from nature, powers peculiar to itself; and it is upon the knowledge and right application of these powers that the pleasure and effect of numbers chiefly depend.

All feet used in poetry consist either of two, or of three syllables; and are reducible to eight kinds; four of two syllables, viz. a Trochee, an Iambus, a Spondee, a Phyrric; and four of three syllables, viz. a Dactyl, an Amphibrach, an Anapæst, and a Tribrach.

A Trochee has the first syllable accented, and the last unaccented; as, "Hāteful, péttish."

An Iambus has the first syllable unaccented, and the last accented: as "Bĕtrāy, cŏnsīst."

A Spondee has both the words or syllables accented: as, "The pāle mōōn,"

A Phyrric has both the words or syllables unaccented: as, "ŏn thĕ tall tree."

A Dactyl has the first syllable accented, and the two latter unaccented: "Lābŏurĕr, póssible."

An Amphibrach has the first and last syllables unaccented; and the middle one accented: as, " Dĕlīghtf ŭl, doméstic."

An Anapæst has the two first syllables unaccented, and the last accented: as, " Cŏntrăvēne, acquiésce."

A Tribach has all its syllables unaccented: as, " Nūmĕrăblĕ, cónquerable."

Some of these feet may be denominated principal feet; as pieces of poetry may be wholly or chiefly formed of any of them. Such are the Trochee, Iambus, Dactyl, and Anapæst, which we shall endeavour to explain. The others may be termed secondary feet; because their chief use is to diversify the numbers, and to improve the verse.

IAMBIC verses may be divided into several species, according to the number of feet or syllables of which they are composed.

The first form of our Iambic which we shall notice is too short to be continued through any great number of lines. It consists of two Iambuses.

Whăt plāce ys hēre!
What scenes appear!
To me the rose
No longer glows.

The second form consists of three Iambuses.

ỳn plācĕs fār ŏr nēar,
Or famous or obscure,
Where wholesome is the air,
Or where the most impure.

The third form is made up of four Iambuses.

ănd māy ăt lāst mỳ wēarỳ āge,
Find out the peaceful hermitage.

The fourth species of English Iambic consists of five Iambuses.

Hŏw lōv'd, hŏw vălū'd ōnce, ăvāils thĕe nōt,
To whom related, or by whom begot:
A heap of dust alone remains of thee;
'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be.

This is called the Heroic measure. In its simplest form it consists of five Iambuses; but by the admission of other feet, as Trochees, Dactyls, Anapæsts, &c. it is capable of many varieties. Indeed, most of the English common measures may be varied in the same way.

The sixth form of our Iambic is commonly called the Alexandrine measure. It consists of six Iambuses.

Fŏr thōu ărt būt ŏf dūst; bĕ hūmblĕ ānd bĕ wīse.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is, in general, more melodious, as this rule is more strictly observed.

TROCHAIC verse is of several kinds.

The shortest Trochaic verse in our language, consists of one Trochee and a long syllable.

Trūĕst lōve,
From above,
Being pure,
Will endure.

This measure is defective in dignity, and can seldom be used on serious occasions.

The second English form of the Trochaic consists of two feet; and is likewise so brief, that it is rarely used for any very serious purpose.

ōn thĕ mōuntăin
By a fountain.

It sometimes contains two feet or trochees, and an additional long syllable: as,

ĭn thĕ dāys ŏf ōld
Fables plainly told.

The third species consists of three trochees: as,

Whēn ŏur hēarts ăre mōurnỳng;

or of three trochees with an additional long syllable: as,

Rēstlĕss mōrtăls tōil fŏr nōught;
Bliss in vain from earth is sought;

The fourth Trochaic species consists of four trochees: as,

Rōund ŭs rōars thĕ tēmpĕst lōudĕr.

The fifth Trochaic species is uncommon. It is composed of five trochees.

āll thăt wālk ŏn fōot ŏr rīde ỳn chārĭŏts,
All that dwell in palaces or garrets.

The sixth form of the English trochaic consists of six trochees: as,

ōn ă mōuntăin, strētch'd bĕneāth ă hōarỳ wīllŏw,
Lay a shepherd swain, and view'd the rolling billow.

This seems to be the longest trochaic line that our language admits.

In all these trochaic measures, the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

The DACTYLIC measure being very uncommon, we shall give only one example of one species of it:

Frŏm thĕ lŏw plēasŭres ŏf thīs făllĕn
nātŭre,
Rise we to higher, &c.

ANAPÆSTIC verses are divided into several species, the first and simplest of which is made up of two anapæsts: as,

Bŭt hĭs cōurăge 'găn fāil,
For no arts could avail.

The second species consists of three anapæsts.

ŏ yĕ wōods, sprĕad yŏur brānchĕs ăpāce;
To your deepest recesses I fly;
I would hide with the beasts of the chase;
I would vanish from every eye.

This is a very pleasing measure, and much used, both in solemn and cheerful subjects.

The third kind of the English anapæstic, consists of four anapæsts.

Măy ĭ gōvĕrn mў pāssĭons wĭth ābsŏlŭte swāy,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

The preceding are the different kinds of the principal feet, in their more simple forms. They are capable of numerous variations, by the intermixture of those feet with each other; and by the admission of the secondary feet.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalæpha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

OF DERIVATION.

IN order that the English Language may be more easily understood, as well as to give a key by which the student may form any derivative, or class of derivatives, that may be omitted in this Dictionary, we think it necessary to enquire how this description of words are deduced from their primitives, and point out the obvious rules by which they not only are formed, but by which their meanings may easily be discovered, and their true pronunciations acquired.

OF SUBSTANTIVES.

Nouns, or Substantives, are derived from verbs; as, from to love, come love; to fright, a fright; to strike, a stroke, &c. &c.

The more usual sorts of derived substantives, or nouns, are Diminutive Nouns, Abstract Nouns, Verbal Substantives of the Actor, Verbal Substantives of the Action; Nouns that signify Office, Nouns that signify Dominion or Rule, and Nouns that signify State or Condition.

Diminutive Nouns express the same as their primitive substantive, with the adjective little, and they are formed by adding the terminations kin, (kĭn), ling (lĭng), ock (ŏk), en (én), el (él), &c. as lamb, lambkin; goose, gosling; duck, duckling; hill, hillock; chick, chicken; cock, cockerel, &c.

Abstract Substantives are regularly formed by adding the termination ness (nĕs), (which denotes the quality or state of what the preceding word expresses) to the adjective, as good, goodness; kind, kindness; and sometimes they end in th (th), as length from long; strength from strong; wealth from weal. Abstract Nouns borrowed from the Latin end variously, as justice, fortitude, liberty, &c.

The Substantives of the Actor or Doer are derived from verbs, and denote the use or habit of doing what the verb from which they are formed expresses. They are generally formed by adding the termination er (ér) to the verb, as teach, teacher; play, player, &c.; but in words borrowed from the Latin we usually keep the Latin termination or (ór), as in doctor, governor, orator, &c.

Substantives signifying action, as separated from the agent or doer, are regularly formed in English by adding the termination ing (ĭng), to the verb, as preach, preaching; pray, praying; sing, singing; learn, learning; read, reading, &c. Some end in ment (mĕnt), age (ĕdzh), ance (ĕns), ery (ĕrў), &c.; as commandment, tillage, appearance, prudery, &c.; and many derived from the Latin end in ion (shŭn), as instruction, correction, &c.; and many otherwise, as lecture, reason, doctrine. &c.

Nouns that signify office, state, condition, &c. are usually formed by adding ship (shĭp) to the primitive substantive, as kingship, the office of a king; stewardship, the office of a steward; guardianship, the office of a guardian; or lordship, partnership, &c. the state or condition of a lord, partners, &c. Some substantives in ship come from adjectives, as hard, hardship, &c. denoting the state of what the preceding word signifies. Nouns that signify state or condition are also formed by adding head (hĕd), or hood (hūd), to the primitive substantive, as the godhead, the state or majesty of God; manhood, the state or condition of a man; childhood, the state or condition of a child; widowhood, the state or condition of a widow.

Nouns that signify dominion, rule, jurisdiction, or state, are usually formed by adding the terminations wick (wĭk), ric (rĭk), and dom (dŏm), as bailiwick the jurisdiction of a bailiff; bishopric, the dominion of a bishop; kingdom, the dominion of a king; freedom, the state of being free, &c.

Nouns that signify profession, generally are formed by adding the termination ian (ăn), as from physic, music, are formed physician, musician, &c.

Nouns denoting character or habit are derived from verbs or adjectives, by adding ard (ărd), as drunk, drunkard; dote, dotard, &c.

Nouns which express particular belief, opinion, doctrine, heresy, sect, or something which affects in the manner the preceding word expresses, are formed by the termination ism (ĭzm), added to the substantive or verb, as puritanism from Puritan; gentilism from Gentile; baptism from to baptise; catechism from to catechise, &c.

Substantives in ist (ĭst), express the maker or writer of, follower or advocate for, a dealer in, or one fond of, or curious in, a player in, one skilled in, one affected with, what the primitive word expresses, as from Latin, Latinist; bigamy, bigamist; dialogue, dialogist; panegyric, panegyrist, to baptize, baptist; drug, druggist, &c. &c.

OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives are derived from Substantives in the following manner, viz. Adjectives denoting plenty or abundance, are formed from Substantives, 1st. by adding y (ў), as from health, healhty; wealth, wealthy; might, mighty, &c. 2dly, By adding ous (ŭs); as from malice, malicious; courage, courageous; right, righteous; &c. or, 3dly, by adding ful (fūl), as from joy, joyful; sin, sinful; health, healthful.

Adjectives denoting plenty, but with some kind of diminution, are formed from Substantives by the termination some (sŏm), as from light, lightsome; trouble, troublesome; toil, toilsome; &c.

Diminutive Adjectives, or those which denote a little or somewhat of the nature or quality of what the preceding word expresses, are formed by adding the termination ish (ĭsh), to a substantive or adjective; as child, childish, or somewhat of a child; black, blackish, or a little black, or somewhat black, &c.

Adjectives of likeness, or those which denote likeness to what the preceding word expresses, are usually formed by adding the termination ly (lў); and sometimes the adjective like (līke); as godly, or like God; manly, or like a man, or man like, &c.

Adjectives signifying capacity, or denoting a passive quality equal to that may be, or worthy of being, what the preceding verb or noun expresses, are formed by adding the final particle able (ébl); as answer, answerable; to move, moveable; to abolish, abolishable; sometimes by changing ate into able; as in abominable, from to abominate, &c. &c.

Material Adjectives, or those denoting the matter out of which any thing is made, are usually formed by adding en ('n) to the substantive; as from oak, oaken; wood, wooden; wool, woollen; gold, golden, &c.

OF VERBS.

Verbs are derived from substantives, adjectives, and sometimes from adverbs; as from the substantive salt, comes to salt; from the adjective warm, to warm; and from the adverb forward, to forward. Sometimes they are formed by lengthening the vowel, or softening the consonant; as from grass, to graze; glass, to glaze; brass, to braze, &c. Sometimes by adding the termination en ('n) to the substantive or adjective; as from strength, to strengthen; length, to lengthen; short, to shorten; wide, to widen, &c.

OF ADVERBS.

Adverbs of quality or likeness are usually formed by adding the termination ly (lў) to the positive adjective; as wise, wisely; foolish, foolishly; sinful, sinfully; base, basely; virtuous, virtuously, &c. In which case it seems in import equal to after the manner of what the preceding word expresses; or in the manner or force and value of the preceding word.

Of the INSEPARABLE PARTICLES un, dis, mis, &c.

These inseparable prefixes in composition all include the negative particle not, besides their peculiar signification.

The particle un (ŭn) always signifies privation, that is, the absence or want of something that either was or ought to be; as unmerciful, unkind, unsteady, &c.

In words derived from the Latin, the particle in (ĭn) is the same as un, as ingratitude, inactive, incomplete, &c. And sometimes it is an intensive particle, and then it signifies very, or very much, as intent, or very earnest, &c. Sometimes, also, in words borrowed from the French, instead of in we use the French particle en (ĕn), when it is not privative, but intimates that the thing is inherent in another, is caused in it, or is tending to a junction. En becomes el before l, and em before b, m, or p, and er before r. The n of in is likewise changed into l, m, and r, according to the initial consonant of the word to be annexed; hence el, em, ir, instead of in; as in illegal, immodest, irregular, &c.

Note—The particle un is always privative, en never; in sometimes privative and sometimes not; yet in verbs it is seldom ever privative, but often in participles and other words.

The particle dis (dĭs), usually signifies some contrariety; as to honour, dishonour; like, dislike; grace, disgrace, &c.; in which this prefix reverses the meaning of each word annexed to it; or denotes the contrary of what each word primitively implies.

The particle mis (mĭs) usually signifies wrong, or error; as to mistake, or take wrong, otherwise than it is; to misuse, or use ill, or otherwise than we ought, &c.
